

The Mountain Pact

June 11, 2024

The Honorable Debra Haaland, Secretary of the Interior
U.S. Department of the Interior
1849 C St. NW Washington, D.C. 20240
CC: Tracy Stone-Manning, Director, Bureau of Land Management
Nada Culver, Deputy Director of Policy and Programs, Bureau of Land Management

Dear Secretary Haaland,

The below listed local elected officials, who represent communities across the Western U.S., are writing to commend you for the Bureau of Land Management's (BLM) final Public Lands Rule which will provide a more balanced approach to public lands management for the West. Doing so will protect some of our communities' important wildlife habitat, treasured recreation areas, critical water resources, and Indigenous cultural sites.

Protected public lands are tremendous assets to Western communities. They play a critical role in our way of life and help make the communities where we live what they are, while contributing to a healthier and better tomorrow for future generations. Yet, many of these areas have been left open to extraction and other commodity driven development, and unprotected.

As the largest land manager in the nation and with nearly 40% of all U.S. federal public lands being overseen by the Bureau of Land Management, the agency must play a leading role in protecting our public lands for the future. We see the Public Lands Rule as being a key tool to help conserve and restore more of our nation's lands and waters for residents, wildlife, and future generations while increasing equitable access to nature.

As the world faces staggering nature loss and disappearance of biodiversity, BLM lands are vital "connective tissue" across the Western United States providing essential core habitat and migration corridors that enable wildlife species and entire ecosystems to survive and thrive. These lands between wilderness areas; national parks; national monuments and refuges; and smaller private, state, county, city, and town lands; are integral to an intact ecosystem that make it easier for species to adapt to climate change. Interconnected landscapes that allow species to reach new habitat areas is an important aspect of preserving ecosystems.

These lands also support a diverse array of outdoor recreation activities and create jobs through the tourism sector that are the backbone of many of our communities. Access to Bureau of Land Management Lands for recreational activities contributes about $11.4 billion to the national economy—critical fiscal certainty for our rural and gateway communities situated near to these lands and waters. Outdoor recreation on public lands creates 5 million jobs across the United States and BLM lands located in our region are favorites for visitors and residents alike for camping, fishing, mountain biking, and hiking.

The Public Lands Rule and new guidance will create opportunities for people to engage and support decision-making about the lands and waters they care about close to home by considering conservation, including watershed and land health, restoration, mitigation, and the protection of critical natural resources. These efforts at the national level will positively impact BLM lands in our communities and across the West.

We applaud the BLM for listening to the voices of our communities and the public with 92% of public comments submitted during the robust comment period being in support of the rule. 82 percent of voters in the west support a national goal of conserving America's lands and waters in the next decade, including bi-partisan support from over 2/3 of conservative Republican voters. We join the overwhelming support for this once-in-a-generation opportunity to put conservation, recreation, and access to nature on equal footing with extractive uses on public lands.

Thank you,
